INFLUENZA SITUATION SUMMARY

Executive Summary

On 01/23/18, the California Department of Public Health (CDPH) reported California continues to see widespread levels of influenza and influenza-like illnesses (ILI) with hospitalizations above expected levels, as reported on 01/13/18. The CDPH Center for Infectious Disease (CID) reports for Week 2 (01/07/17 – 01/13/18) there have been 32 laboratory confirmed influenza associated fatalities and 44 laboratory confirmed influenza outbreaks. To date, there have been 74 laboratory confirmed influenza associated fatalities and 184 laboratory confirmed influenza outbreaks for people under the age of 65. Updated Influenza data is released each Friday.

The Medical and Health Coordination Center (MHCC) remains activated at Level 3 (low) to compile and update information related to influenza from a variety of sources and to coordinate response activities across CDPH Centers and Programs. To best align with current CDPH CID influenza reporting, the MHCC will release future Situation Reports every Friday.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A midweek storm will produce periods of moderate to heavy precipitation, significant mountain snow and gusty winds in Northern and Central California starting tonight through Friday.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

- <https://alerts-v2.weather.gov/counties/CA>

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The unsettled and moist weather pattern will continue through the week and last into the weekend due to a series of Pacific trough passages. A vigorous trough will begin to spread precipitation into northwest portions of the region tonight and spread south and eastward Wednesday into Wednesday night. Residual, generally light showery impacts will continue on Thursday and Friday with cooler than normal temperatures. Liquid precipitation amounts will favor the North Coast and Mid Coast to Mendocino PSAs as well as the west slopes of the Cascade and lesser extent Sierra ranges. Expect values between 2.0 to 4.0 liquid water amounts in the favored areas. The Sacramento Valley will receive wetting rain. Snow accumulation levels will lower down to 1500 to 2500 feet Wednesday night through Friday.

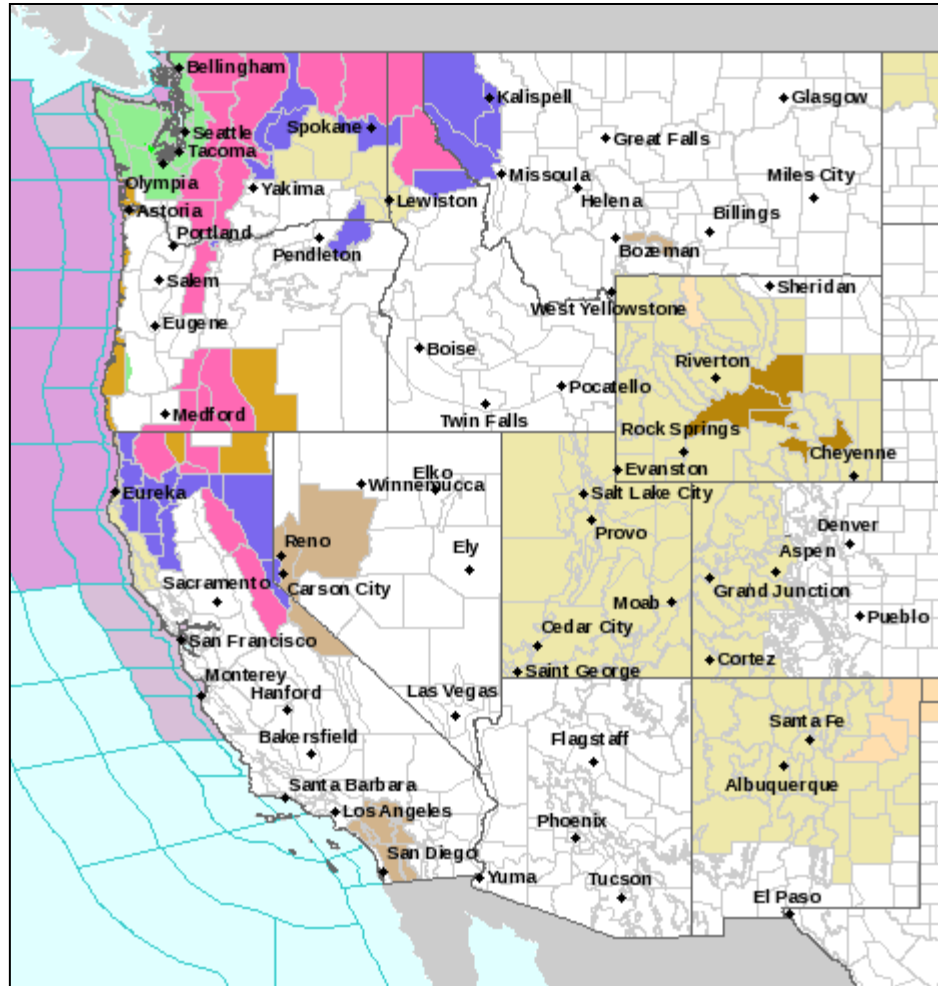

Another Pacific system will spread precipitation across much of the area Saturday into Saturday night. Weather models have been fairly consistent with keeping the precipitation a little further north during the weekend compared to previous system passages which provided an area wide effect. That trend could continue into early next week with a system passing a little further to the north. There is growing confidence that next week looks to be drier overall compared to the previous two weeks so will be watching that trend closely.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will be 5 to 10 degrees above normal through Wednesday as a weak area of high pressure sits over the region. Maximum temperatures will be in the upper 40s and 50s across the mountains and 60s to mid 70s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% away from the Central Valley through Wednesday. Local northeast winds of 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 35 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of the region through this afternoon. A Pacific trough will bring scattered showers to Central California Wednesday evening through Thursday afternoon. Most locations will receive less than a quarter inch of rainfall, but the Central Sierra and its associated foothills will receive up to an inch of rainfall. The snow level will be around 5,000 feet. There will be westerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph across the mountain ridges and desert passes Wednesday evening through Thursday afternoon. The back side of this trough will bring northerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph to much of Santa Barbara County and the Grapevine Thursday evening through Friday morning. Temperatures will be a little below average Thursday and Friday. Significant warming and drying will occur this weekend into early next week as a strong ridge of high pressure builds into California from the Pacific Ocean. Temperatures will be 10 to 15 degrees above normal and minimum humidity will be mainly in the teens by Sunday. Local offshore winds of 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 35 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of the region Saturday morning into early next week.
